1. Introduction. It is estimated that people are exposed to approximately one hundred thousand synthetic chemicals, yet only about 10% of these chemicals have been evaluated for safety (Hartung, 2017). Standard safety evaluations conducted on laboratory mammals are time consuming and expensive, limiting the number of compounds that can be processed for this type of risk assessment (Rovida and ...

Electronics are a part of life for all of us these days - including young children. However, while screens can be helpful in the right context (like devices that help children communicate), they can actually decrease word and sentence use in toddlers when used only for entertainment. In this article, we examine new research on screen time and toddlers, and suggest ways to build communication ...
